Camelot — based on T.H. White's novel The Once and Future King — is about the idealized kingdom of Camelot, the love triangle of King Arthur, Queen Guenevere, and Sir Lancelot, and the treachery of the king's illegitimate son, Mordred. The Broadway production opened on December 3, 1960 with the lead roles indelibly performed by Richard Burton, Julie Andrews and Robert Goulet. The musical features songs such as "I Wonder What the King Is Doing Tonight," "How to Handle A Woman," "The Simple Joys of Maidenhood," "The Lusty Month of May," and "If Ever I Would Leave You." The musical was made into a film in 1967 and it won three Academy Awards.

The New York Philharmonic's tradition of presenting semi-staged musicals includes Lerner and Loewe's My Fair Lady (March 2007), starring Kelli O'Hara and Kelsey Grammer, conducted by Rob Fisher, directed by James Brennan, and produced by Thomas Z. Shepard. Bernstein's Candide preceded it, in May 2004, conducted by Marin Alsop and starring Kristin Chenoweth, Patti LuPone, and Paul Groves, with Lonny Price directing. In May 2000 Stephen Sondheim's Sweeney Todd reached the Avery Fisher Hall stage, starring Patti LuPone, George Hearn, and Audra McDonald; Andrew Litton conducted and Lonny Price directed. In September 1985, the Orchestra offered Sondheim's Follies, conducted by Paul Gemignani and directed by Herbert Ross, with an all-star cast from Broadway and opera. Founded in 1842, the New York Philharmonic is the oldest symphony orchestra in the United States and one of the oldest in the world, and has played a leading role in American musical life, championing the new music of its time and commissioning or premiering many important works. Always a leader in American musical life, the Philharmonic has become renowned around the globe, appearing in 422 cities in 59 countries on five continents. As a media pioneer, the Orchestra began radio broadcasts in 1922, and is currently represented by The New York Philharmonic This Week — syndicated nationally 52 weeks per year, and available at nyphil.org and on XM Satellite Radio. In addition, the Philharmonic's concerts are now broadcast throughout Europe on BBC Radio 3. On television, in the 1950s and '60s the New York Philharmonic inspired a generation through Bernstein's Young People's Concerts on CBS. Its television presence has continued with annual appearances on Live From Lincoln Center. Credit Suisse is the first-ever and exclusive Global Sponsor of the New York Philharmonic.
